Councillor Fennessy thanked his colleagues for their continued support. He said they worked well as a team together last year and it made it easier to deliver a number of key infrastructural projects in Navan and looks forward to a continuation of that relationship. Councillor Fennessy thanked his family for their continued support, particularly his wife Lynn and his son Ned. He also thanked his colleagues in Sinn Féin for the trojan work they carry out behind the scenes. He went on to mention some colleagues who are no longer with us but who were a great influence to him.

From a personal perspective, it was an honour and a privilege for him to serve a second term as Mayor. His priority is to work with the council to deliver quality services, infrastructure and investment in our communities. A number of key projects are under construction in the town at the moment and others will commence this year. When completed, they will transform Navan into a modern vibrant town. A place that people will want to live, work and do business in. As Mayor, he will work with the council to deliver that transformation.
